Translation

| Barbara | f. Child Female | Johann Scholz | Day laborer Catholic | Freystadt City | Anna Maria Metzger | Spouses Catholic | Freystadt City | 30 Oct. 1845 4 o'clock in the evening. | 31 Oct. 1845 in the church here | Anton Rusch, Dr. of Theology, City Pastor | Barbara Mauder, blacksmith's wife here. |

Historical Context

This document is a single entry from a Catholic baptismal register (Kirchenbuch) from the mid-19th century. It follows a standard tabular format used in German-speaking regions during this period. The record serves as official proof of birth and religious initiation. The mention of "Freystadt Stadt" indicates the family lived within the city limits of Freystadt.

The father's occupation as a "Tagelöhner" (day laborer) suggests a working-class social status. The use of Kurrent script is typical for German records of this era.

Key Findings

This is a baptismal record for Barbara Scholz, born on October 30, 1845, and baptized the following day in Freystadt. She was the legitimate daughter of Johann Scholz, a Catholic day laborer, and Anna Maria Metzger. The godmother was Barbara Mauder, a blacksmith's wife.

Suggested Next Steps

- You should search MyHeritage for "Barbara Scholz" born in 1845 in Freystadt to find potential census records or later marriage/death entries.
- You should look for the marriage record of Johann Scholz and Anna Maria Metzger in the Freystadt Catholic parish registers, likely occurring between 1835 and 1845.
- You should investigate which "Freystadt" this refers to; a common candidate is Freystadt in Schlesien (now Koźuchów, Poland). If so, check the State Archives in Poland (Szukaj w Archiwach) for digitized duplicates of these registers.
- You should search for other children born to this couple in the same parish to build a more complete family profile.
