Historical Context

This document is an entry from a 19th-century Catholic marriage register (Traungsbuch), likely from a German-speaking region. It follows a standardized tabular format used to record essential genealogical data for legal and ecclesiastical purposes. The record provides the names, occupations, residences, and parentage of the couple, as well as their specific birth dates. The term "allda" (meaning "in this place") indicates that both the groom and bride were residents of the parish where the wedding was celebrated. The groom's occupation as a soap boiler journeyman and his father's status as a citizen and master soap boiler suggest a family trade and a stable social standing within the community.

Details Mentioned

- Joseph Schulz: Groom. He was a soap boiler journeyman (Seifensiedergesell) residing at house number 73 in the parish. He was born on March 24, 1810. His father was also named Joseph Schulz, a citizen and soap boiler.
- Anna Maria Metzger: Bride. She was a Catholic daughter residing in the same parish. She was born on September 30, 1809. Her parents were Anton Metzger and Maria Vogel.
- Simon Warmuth: Witness.
- Franz Müllner: Witness.
- Marriage Event: The marriage took place on January 11, 1835.

Key Findings

This document records the marriage of Joseph Schulz, a soap boiler journeyman, and Anna Maria Metzger on January 11, 1835. It provides their exact birth dates (March 24, 1810, and September 30, 1809, respectively) and identifies their parents, offering a clear path for further ancestral research.

Suggested Next Steps

- You should search for the baptismal records of Joseph Schulz (March 1810) and Anna Maria Metzger (September 1809) in the same parish registers to confirm their parentage and identify potential siblings.
- You should look for the marriage records of the parents—Joseph Schulz and his wife, and Anton Metzger and Maria Vogel—in the years preceding 1809 to extend your lineage.
- You should check MyHeritage for historical records and family trees matching these names, specifically focusing on the locality where this register was maintained.

- You should investigate house number 73 in local land or census records to see if there is more information about the Schulz family's soap-boiling business.
