Historical Context

This is a Catholic baptismal register entry from Arnstein, Germany, dated 1841. It records the birth and baptism of Simon Schulz, as well as his subsequent infant death just a few months later on October 21, 1841, which is noted by the cross symbol (+) added later by the priest. The document provides a rich snapshot of the family's social standing, noting the father as a day laborer and the mother as a baker's daughter. The time of birth is recorded very precisely as 'Nacht 3/4 12 Uhr' (11:45 PM), which was typical for German church records of this era to establish exact legal birth times. The term 'Dahier' is an archaic German word meaning 'here' or 'in this place,' indicating the events and people were local to Arnstein.
